HCI final project

What:

The project I have decided to make for HCI is a recipe sharing website where people will be able to share their recipes online and be able to show off their cooking skills for a variety of reasons. One of your many questions would be would I be able to pull this off at technical aspect. Moreover, how do I plan to design this website, who do I plan to sell this app too, and what will keep my target audience captivated in my website. Lastly, why did I choose this as my final project for human computer interaction.

Firstly, before we move any further, the writer of this essay figures he is obligated to first discuss whether he may or may not be capable of creating this website in a technical aspect. Though the developer of this project, this paragraph, and the site which is to be created will be able to create the front-end aspect of this project, he would find it difficult to find confidence in creating the back end of this website, that being things such as databases, and user generated content. So, to summarise this paragraph, the creator is confident in his designing skills, however is less confident in his more technical skills in website making.
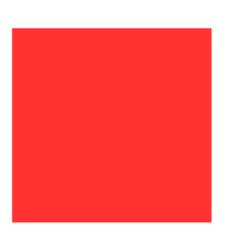

Moving on now that we have discussed the first topic, we will now move on to how the creator of the website plans to design this website. On of the many ways he has decided to design this website was to use canvas site and its ability to create a design medium to first plan how his website will look before doing any implementation, however this does not mean he will forget to use his html skills which bring the writer to the so while also developing a look for his website the writer will also develop a sort of base for his site.

Furthermore, who will I be planning to sell this product too and what will be the key features, which keeps them around. The people who I plan to sell the product too are people who want to feel good about their cooking, to better clarify people who want to receive approval for others. Secondly, what feature would attract these kinds of people, the feature which would attract my target audience is the feature to receive approval through comments from other people, at least this is the original plan, things may change, for I would not know how to allow users to make accounts.

Finaly why has the writer chosen to create the recipe sharing site for his final project. The writer had chosen this because he himself has been equipped with some level of knowledge in culinary arts, and would like to brag about his skill in some way. Furthermore, with this project he would be able to brag while doing a task.

First design (Canva):

title

as you can see i am some what expereicenced in the world of cooking, for as this picture presents me fliping fried rice with a wok

besides fried rice, my stir fry beef is also quite a decent